When he takes his only son Troy east for a tour of colleges, Brad Soares (Stiller), once himself a golden boy at his own university, becomes obsessed with the roads not taken in his life, and is constantly tormented by self-abasing fantasies of what might have been. Increasingly disgruntled by his own perceived shortcomings and failures, especially in contrast to his former Tufts classmates, who have all gone on to fame and fortune, Brad embarks on his own tour -- an agonizing, comical but ultimately redemptive journey to self-awareness. In the quiet and struggling town of Laurens, South Carolina circa 1996, racial tension bubbles under the surface - the status quo. When a group of Klansmen open the "Redneck Shop", a public tribute to the KKK in the middle of town square, Reverend David Kennedy is determined to unite the black community and put a stop to the outward display of hatred. Michael Burden, raised by the Klan and entrusted as the owner of the shop, is beginning to question everything he's ever stood for thanks to the love of a woman and the grace shown to him by Reverend Kennedy. Walking away from the Klan is easy, but surviving their wrath and putting aside his prejudice proves to be the hardest thing Burden has ever tried to do.

Set amongst the backdrop of a small, traveling circus, the story focuses on life between performances and the relationships of the circus family. 'The Man/ The Clown' is still in love with his former partner 'Emm', a trapeze artist in the troupe. Their 6 year old daughter, 'Star', performs with her father and is his near constant companion. As we go deeper into their world, we learn that The Man has recently met a girl from the local town... 'Misty Dawn' is beautiful, vulnerable, almost unreal in her otherworldliness. The Man and Misty Dawn take a small vacation of sorts but it is interrupted by news of the coinciding deaths of The Man's mother and his close friend 'Vander'. As we follow The Man on his journey to bury his mother, and then to rejoin his circus family, we are reminded that love and loss go hand in hand. Through the celebration of circus and The Man's return to Misty Dawn, we are also reminded that love can triumph and magic lies always just around the corner.

Lauren Mauldin is a strong-willed and misguided woman who launches a blog after being cheated on one too many times. She encourages women to follow "The PIG Theory," and to break up with men precisely at six months in order to avoid heartache. Her plan works smoothly until her sister Gena introduces her to the charming Calvin Chesney, who refuses to be dumped. Instead, he challenges Lauren to a competition to prove her theory wrong, using his closest friends and challengers and Lauren's own friends as bait. With twists and turns and surprise challengers along the way, no one can predict how this will all turn out. And while no one can deny our sexual instincts are strong, we all continue to put our hearts on the line because in the end, we truly hope that love is stronger.

Described as an epic saga of the secret history of the 1930s American heartland, the project centers on the mythic conflict and bloody struggle between big money and the downtrodden, God and greed, charlatans and prophets. The pilot follows Seth Davenport, a man masquerading as a small town Iowa preacher in the hopes of starting a full-blown insurrection against the status quo. Focused on his mission, he is unaware that an industrialist tycoon has hired a professional strikebreaker named Creeley Turner to stop the uprising by any means necessary. But unbeknownst to those around them, these two men already share a secret bloody past.

Jessie (Mortimer) & Gerald, an unhappily married couple, are spending a long weekend at a cabin in the woods, to play a few sexy games, push the boundaries a little, and see if they can jump-start a dead marriage. In an attempt to spice things up, Jessie is handcuffed to a very sturdy bedpost but before anything can happen her husband keels over on the floor from a heart attack, never to arise. Without food or water or hope of escape, and with a stray dog gnawing happily on her husband's corpse, Jessie descends into something that feels a lot like madness. While she's waiting for death to make its very leisurely approach, Jessie's mind is drawn back into her past, rather than face a future that consists of little but pain, humiliation and terror.

A coming-of-age, family drama mashed up with a superhero/spy show. The story of Henrietta "Henry" Cole and her family who've lived their entire lives in middle-of-nowhere, rural, Valleyford Washington. Valleyford is a town - once quaint and safe - that suddenly finds itself struggling under the weight of encroaching real world problems like unemployment, drugs, and violence. And it's under this pressure, that Henry suddenly comes to realize that she has a secret -- and a power -- that will alter the trajectory of her family, and Valleyford, forever.

Gary and Samantha have just been married and can't wait to start their new life together. Gary is also eager to bond with Samantha's quiet son Lucas in order to prove himself a capable stepfather. But Lucas is an odd kid, and odd things seem to follow him everywhere. As Gary doubles his efforts to bond with Lucas, he finds himself uncovering a dark secret: Lucas may or may not be the anti-Christ, and Gary may or may not have to kill his own stepson in order to prevent a terrible evil from destroying everything. Hopefully Child Services doesn't stop him before it's too late. (September 19 - October 21)

In a small American town suffering from economic hardships, young Sydney Killian watches, heartbroken, as her family teeters of the verge of losing the horse ranch that has been in their family for generations. While walking in the woods one day, she makes a magical discovery: a winged pony that has fallen from the sky. While her and her brother struggle to nurse the creature back to health, and as pressure mounts against the family to sell their ranch, the winged pony begins to bring new life to the struggling town. Sydney learns the true meaning of love and family, in a race against time to save the family's heritage, and return the pony to its mother in the skies. (September 26 - October 14)

John McDavid grew up in the worst area of North Sac with a white supremacist father, his brother Rory pushing him to join the same club and a dim future. After a horrible family incident, John is sent to a juvenile detention center by the courts. Left there to rot, fearing for his own life on the inside as he endured similar violent beatings that he inflicted on others outside those walls, John was about to lose all hope. A crusading cop and social worker help procure potential foster parents for John... the rub is that it would be a year probation living with them before a formal adoption. He becomes hopeful until the foster parents arrive and he discovers that they're an interracial couple. Eldridge and Maryanne Buultjens take him home and together they learn how to respect and live. Eldridge forms a very close bond with John, teaching him how to ride a bicycle for the first time and this leads to his fascination with BMX and thrusts John Buultjens into the path that made him famous within the BMX world.

One day during a family outing at Lake Minnewaska State Beach, young wife and mother Cora Tanner is suddenly overcome by an inexplicable fit of rage and violently stabs a stranger to death while forty stunned witnesses watch. Horrified by what she's done, Cora has no motive or excuse for her behavior and tersely insists on pleading guilty and taking her punishment. Baffled by Cora's self-incriminating silence, and convinced she's hiding some deeper trauma, detective Harry Ambrose finds himself obsessed with uncovering Cora's buried motive, and together they travel a harrowing journey into the depths of her psyche and the violent secrets hidden in her past.

A fascinating atmospheric thriller with basis in fact that has Helen Mirren playing an heiress to a gun making fortune who builds a massive mansion to atone for guilt over the weapons. Mirren plays firearms heiress Sarah Winchester, who was convinced that she was haunted by the souls killed at the hands of the Winchester repeating rifle. After the sudden deaths of her husband and child, she threw herself into the 24-hour a day, seven days a week construction of an enormous mansion designed to keep the evil spirits at bay. But when skeptical San Francisco psychiatrist Eric Price is dispatched to the estate to evaluate her state of mind, he discovers that her obsession may not be so insane after all. The film take audiences inside the labyrinth like house that is believed to be one of the most haunted places in the world.
